In re: Estate of Lou Anna Lawhorn

Dear Eddie:

I am sorry for the delays in getting back to you; however, I have not been able to get any response Freddie's lawyer.

On October 11, I received the enclosed letter with attachments. The attachments give detailed information about the various bank accounts your mother had when she died.

As you can see from Mr. Smith's letter, Freddie alleges that all the monies have been properly divided. He further is willing to let you take over as Administrator.

I am providing all the information to you for you to review, analyze and compare with the information you have and the payments you received. Once your review is complete, please advise me of the amount of any discrepancies.

If there are discrepancies, you then need to decide what you want to do. Your brother and uncle would be liable for repayment of any discrepancies; however, it is likely you would need to sue your brother and uncle. Based on the comments you made to me, you do not believe your brother has the funds to repay any discrepancies and you were not inclined to force repayment from your uncle.

Another consideration will need to be the cost of pursuing collection. We will need to discuss the cost of pursuing recovery and compare it with the anticipated amount to be recovered to determine whether the cost, in terms of money, time, and emotional strain, are worth the effort.

Please let me have your thoughts.

Very truly yours,
